or Genius Who Became Potent on the Pettibone Place, Whose Strange saidle Caused His Master to Moura, ROULETTE, Pa., May 31,-"If you should hapen to notice that I appear to be somewhat in hadepths of gloom," said the man from over Sincemahuning way, "you needn't wonder whether you are mistaken or not. You are not mistaken. I am in the depths of gloom by a large majority, so to speak. And I have good reason to be. Nicodemus is dead. Companion of my chiefhood, friend of my later years, Nicoleft me. I will never see his like Never: Bon't smile when I tell you who Nico-demus was. It would be mocking at my sorrow.

Mackinaw," said the man from over Sinnemahoning way, "serves to cheer me. It nerves me to tell you about him. If you could ever have een Nicodemus you'd have liked him. He might have run and hid himself if he saw you coming. I think it more than likely that he would. A good many geese and chickens used to be missed over on the Sinnemahone every now and then. But if I could have restored conadence in Nicodemus, and he had come out and let you see him, you'd have liked him. You ouldn't have helped it. My, my, my! what a

"I was only six years old when I first met Nicodemus. That isn't exactly true, either, because he wasn't Nicodemus then, and I didn't see him for three weeks after I first met him. Kind of a puzzle, ain't it? Riddle, as it were, But it isn't. One day, child of nature as I was, as I sm, as I aiways will be until I follow Nicodemus, I was wandering along the shores of my beloved, the storied Sinnemahone. In a bunch of weeds I found an egg. An egg so large that it filled both my hands as I hurried home with I took it to my father, Reuben Pettibone.
"Praxiteles, said he, where did you get it?"

"Father, said I, 'I cannot tell a lie. I did not lay it. I found it along the Sinnemahone." "Strange,' said my father, 'how everything pays tribute to Sinnemahoning! Even a wild pays tribute to Sinhemanding. Even a wind goose, flying over, has paused long enough in its flight to leave this egg among us as a slight token of its esteem. Praxiteles, said he, 'I think we'll cook it.'

"Father,' said i,' why not mix it up with the "Traxiteles, my son,' said my father, 'you are wise beyond your years. For one so young there is a long future before you. We will hatch the edg.

"So we put the wild goose egg under the old setting turkey hea and she settled down and went to work at it. In time there came forth with the turkey brood a gosling it was a joy to look at. When it saw me it waddled straight look at. When it saw me it waddled straight with the turkey brood a gosling it was a joy to look at. When it saw me it waddled straight to where I was sitting in the grass, and actually stock up one of its little yellow web feet to grake hands with me! I believe now, and always have believed, that the gosling knew that I had saved it to become what it was and was to be. I shook hands with it, and it went back to its foster mether and foster brothers and sisters.

I had saved it to become what it was and was to be. I shook hands with it, and it went back to its foster mother and foster brothers and sisters. "When the gosling got strong enough I named it Nicodemus. As he grew, Nicodemus and I became as two brothers. But let that pass. It is painful. For forty-three years we occurred the clearing where we both were born, and now, barely in the prime of his life, Nicodemus, in the discharge of his duty on the farm, has had to go! And there shall never be a new cow upon the place again!
"During the more than twoscore years that Nicodemus was an honored and a pampered coscupant of the Pettibone place he developed many unique and ungeosely traits of character. He would never recognize, much less associate with, any of the other gesee on the clearing. But he liked the turkeys. He used to hobnob with them, and they looked up to him. As well they might. I'll tell you why, and then see if yordon't say the same. One day mother said to father:

"The preacher's on the circuit and to-mor-

The preacher's on the circuit and to-morrows our day for having him to dinner, and there ain't a yellow-leg chicken on the place!"

Never mind, said father. "There's some hie fat turkeys, I've noticed that preachers
don't turn their plates upside down when there an't anything but turkeys on the circuit. Have pienty o' giblet gravy and mashed 'tatera and hot biscuits and have your pie cut in extra big pieces, and you needn't be airaid that the preacher il go way bewaiting that in the shortless of the vellow-leg chicken crop he sees danger threatening the Church militant."

Nacdemus was by, but didn't take any interest in the conversation apparently not exactly getting the drift of it. Father killed a size fat, young turkey, and Nicodemus was wouldy cut up over it. The preacher came, but Nicodemus didn't take to him, and stayed in his own house until the dominie went away,
About a year from that time mother said to father one day:

"The transfer's coming to dinner to morrow."

Is pose we'll have to give him turkey again.

Yes, said father. 'Chickens are scarce.'

'Nicoderus was by. Aftera while I noticed him sauntering out toward the barnyard. I watched him. He went around among the turkeys got 'em all in a bunch, and marched them off toward the woods, 'way on the other side of the charing. In the course of an hour watched him. He went around among the turkeys, got 'em ail in a bunch, and marched them off toward the woods, 'way on the other side of the clearing. In the course of an hour stop he came back, looking pleased, and after a while, when father went out to get a turkey for the peracher's dinner and couldn't find a turkey on the place nor anywhere around it. Nicodemus went out behind the house and folled and rolled on the grass, kicking his big web feet gleefully in the air. I didn't say a word. I wasn't going to give Nicodemus away. But there was consternation, dismay, and trouble at the house, and mother at last had to compromise on a goose. Nicodemus stood by and saw that goose's head chopped off with composure and, it seemed to me, entire approval. The preacher came to dinner, and Nicodemus stood in the door and watched him eat. I thought, when the preacher went away, a little sooner than usual, that there was a losa on his face as if he thought things seemed dark for the Clurch militant. Anyhow, i'm sure about this. Nicodemus wore a sardonic grin that was painful to look at. By and by he waddled leisurely away, and in an hour or so came marching back at the head of the flock of turkeys, would they have been not to book up to such a bird as Nicodemus was? Not sinteenahone turkeys, you bet.

"Once a hound that I owned made me a present of the pupp hounds. Nicodemus looked the litter over one day after they had got old alongh to rin about and made up his mind that one slick, buckskin-colored little chap needed his care, and he at once assumed a fatherly interest in the pup. They used to have great times together, and there wasn't anything on the place, not even me, that Nicodemus thought so much of as he did of that hound pup. One day the nup was tumbling about on the ground and Nicodemus was taking a quiet nap not far away. Suddents was taking a quiet nap not far away. Suddents was taking a quiet nap not far away. the spot, and by the time Nicodemus got fully awake he saw a big hawk sailing away with his pap. I saw it, too, and felt sorry for Nicodemus, he thought so much of the dog.

Nick, old boy, said I, your pup's a goner? Int Nicodemus thought different. He rose spout of that yard like a skyrocket, and away he went on the trail of that hawk so swift that he overhanded the impudent robber before he had got a hundred feet in the air, and pitched into him so hereely that the big bird let go the pup and made off. The pup came tumbling toward the ground.

You might as well let the hawk have it. You might as well let the hawk have it, a said i, as to let it squash itself to death such a fall as that?

Again Nicodemus differed with me. He

Such a fall as that? Again Nicodemus differed with me. He object down so fast that he passed the falling the got order it, caught it on his back and logs, and salled back with it to the very spot lore the hawk had seized it. The pup wasn't lift mich, and was as good as, new in a day or so, i had forgotten that Nicodemus was a digouse, but Nicodemus hadn't. I fell heir to the Petithone piace when Nicomus was twenty-three years old. That was sent years ago, and for all those years we ran a place on partnership. Nicodemus kept close action of thuse, I dell you. If a man wanted to the to work for me, I'd always say; with the mest abject consideration. I actually pampered it in its stall. At last I ventured to try it at ploughing corn. I harnessed it to the plough and started in. Nicodemus went along to see how things turned out. The mule ploughed two or three furrows in a way that made in heart dame with delight.

"Nicodemus cocked his eye ups at me and kind of grinned. I ploughed half through another furrow when suddenly the mule stopped. I coaxed, and whitped, and coaxed, and waited in silent intervals the mule's pleasure. That pleasure seemed to be to continue standing stock still in the hot confided until the judgment day. I spent an hour in this recreation, Nicodemus standing by and never saying a word. At last he seemed to think it was time for some one to take a hand in it who could do something toward getting things the man and confided. He walked around with a critical opport times, looking it over least that mule. He dapped his wings about the mule's cars, and nipped first one of them and then the other, and nipped them hard, all the time screenling and screaming like a whole flock of fields. NEWTOWN CREEK NUISANCES.

The Kings county Grand Jury yesterday handed down six indictments against the owners of some of the alleged Newtown Creek nuinot disclosed. The Grand Jury also brought in this presentment:

"We find that the sewage emptying into the creek from Brooklyn and Long Island City is in itself a serious nuisance and detrimental to health, and we recommend that steps be taken to divert the course of this sewage and other discharges of refuse from various sources which now find an outlet there so that they will instead enter directly into the East River. And we also recommend that steps be taken at once to afford temporary relief while such permanent improvements as the authorities may determine upon in this connection are being completed, to the end that the health of the citizens thereabout may be endancered no more than is actually unavoidable during the coming hot season.

"The creek itself, being in a very filthy condition, in our opinion should be thoroughly dredged and bulkheaded its entire length as soon as possible, and if this course is decided upon the point at which the sewers empty should receive attention first, as no doubt a more active movement of tide water would serve to remove to some extent the deposits now lodged and accumulating at the mouth of the different sewers."

The Grand Jury Overhauls the Affairs of The Kings County Grand Jury yesterday rought in an indictment for t against Albert H. Dollard, President of the Lewis & Fowler Girder Rail Company and the ewis & Fowler Manufacturing Company. He is charged with having signed a declaration of a dividend when there was no surplus money to pay it, and when both companies were practically bankrupt.

The inquiry by the Grand Jury showed that two months after the dividend was declared a receiver was appointed for the companies. It is alleged that nearly $170,000 had disappeared, and that an unexpected indebtedness of $80,000 was piled up against the companies.

Mr. Dollard is a brother-in-law of Daniel F. Lewis, President of the Heights Railrond Company. Mr. Lewis organized the Girder Rail and Manufacturing companies, but for some time has not been active in their management.
